ABSTRACT

A method for managing a code sequence is disclosed. First intermediate correlation values for a first plurality of sample sequences are determined during a first clock cycle. Second intermediate correlation values for the first plurality of sample sequences are determined during a second clock cycle. Correlation outputs for the first plurality of sample sequences are determined from the first and second intermediate correlation values.